

partner. I have known Joel for same time, and worked very closely with him during the hectic week after the festival. I would say unreservedly that if a financial catastrophe is averted, if the creditors are paid and if my brother emerges from the mess with any honor, it will be due in no small measure to Joel's sanity, intelligence and hard work.

Moreover, Joel's association with my brother in other ventures has proved valuable and profitable for both. As a member of the New York bar and a graduate of Yale Law School, Joel has no need for a free ride, as the article implies he is taking, from my brother or anyone else. Rest assured that he is giving full economic value for any benefits he may be receiving.

You have dealt Joel, who is essentially defenseless against you, a low blow, particularly since, as I understand it, Mr. Reeves never even interviewed him in preparing the article.

WOODSTOCK PROMOTER

TO THE EDITOR:

Richard Reeves's article about the promoters of the Woodstock Festival unfairly and nastily maligns Joel Rosenman, my brother's
